Profiting by our suggestion of yesterday, as soon as the Courier was received this morning the letter we publish this morning from Messrs. Winchester, Cooke, and Webb, Sen. ators from this city. The measure will be fully and thoroughly considered, and as the necessity of a change in our police system is acknowledged by all, we doubt not a bill just in itself and entirely satisfactory to our people will be framed and adopted. It is fortunate that the delegation in the Legislature from this city is composed of able and discrete from this city is composed of able and discrete from this city is composed of able and discrete gentlemen, some of whom have had a creet gentlemen, some of whom have had a specific or the wants or even whims of the ladies might developed the source of the source of the ladies might developed the source of the ladies and the looped the looped the ladies and the looped the source of the ladies of the looped the looped the looped the reet gentlemen, some of whom have had a arge experience in city affairs, and in whose cood judgment and prudence we all have full

They may rely with full confidence in the Legislature doing what is right and proper. Either the present bill will be relieved of its objectionable features—and it contains some-very obnoxious ones—or a new bill that will be acceptable will be framed and adopted. The first contains as to the action of the Legislature.

While that body will relieve us of police rule it will not fasten upon us any oppressive or anti-Democratic measures. In any event ample time will be given to consider and discuss the subject in all its bearings, and attention having been directed to it, our representatives will be thoroughly posted and will be able to act understandingly. We will soon speak of the bill and other proposed measures more at length.

The Session of the Legislature.

Under a provision of the State constitution, no session of the General Assembly can sontinue beyond sixty days except by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each House. In view of the impossibility of getting through with necessary legislation within the prescribed time, a joint resolution the constitutional limit, but the Senate refused to concur in it.

Up to this time local bills have occupied much of the attention of the Legislature, to the exclusion of legislation of a more general character, and an adjournment at the expiration of the sixty days would be a serious misfortune. We entirely concur in the abstract correctness of the aphorism that "the world is too much governed," but there are matters upon which the interests of the Commonwealth demand a change in our statute laws. It is the duty of the legislators to see that these are on no account neglected. We cannot doubt that the Senate will reconsider its rejection of the House resolution.

There is no more right, as I have attempted to show, for us to say in the first section of this bill that the court shall not recognize these State governments as being a realid, that it shall not pass upon that question, that no judicial power is vested in them to do so, than for that court to say to this Congress that it shall not pass upon that this covernment is based; and all departures from them are, in my judgment, violent to the first insurural address of Thomas Jefferson as containing the true princips upon which this Government is based; and all departures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the control of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from them are, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in my judgment, violent of the partures from the mare, in m ment by telegraph that he had arrived in Washington. A very few trusted friends had the distinguished honor of sharing in his moonlight flitting through the country of those from whom he apprehended violence to his person.

There are but few of our readers, we say, who cannot call to mind the amused and yet contemptuous astonishment produced by this extraordinary affair. Every body knew that the danger which esused the newly elected Chief Magistrate to act so undiquified a part, and to bring upon himself the ridisule a part, and to bring upon himself the ridicule of the world, was as unreal as the baseless fabric of a dream. Democrats saw in the behavior of the Republican President a tacit so aptly illustrated the proverb "the wicked her her filee when no man pursueth." A prevailing son was file when no man pursueth." A prevailing sentiment of regret, however, was discernible among men of all parties. People could not but feel sad at the thought of this man hurrying, fearful and in disguise, through one of the old thirteen States to take possession of the old thirteen States to take the chair in which Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Monroe had sat,

As time went on the development of the character so inimical to the South that it could be easily understood how the con-

elf to be still an enlightened and cati

Union, while he sacredly respected and uphold the honor, safety, peace, and reserved rights of every sovereign State composing it.

Could his noble spirit, conscious of the earthly honor you would pay it by a commemoration of the day, which, during life he rendered immortal, speak to the statesmen who surround your festive board, what would be its utterance? Methinks it would blead in plaintive, touching tones, through the Democracy of this nation, and through every other good and true patriot, whatever his past political opinions, for a whole Union and a whole Constitution! Nay, more—would not Andrew Jackson's spirit implore for that people, whom, more than fitty years ago, on the 8th of January, he, with his Spartan band, saved from foreign sack and sacrilege, that they might be spared from greater horrors now threatening them from the misrule and usurpations of a portion of the American people. coln, and many thousands like him, the country would have been infinitely the gainer. As ed at the life of his favorite. In this fill-advised and malicious attempt the foolish author published a statement from Superintendent Kennedy, of the New York Metropolitan police, regarding certain efforts and the history control of the New York Metropolitan police, regarding certain efforts and the history certains of the state of the sta at the Hermitage, in his own loved Technical leged conspiracy. Kennedy of course failed to make out a case, though evincing much anxiety to do so. This publication, if it failed in the executive department of arousing a longing for fame, not numixed with a little envy toward Kennedy, in the breast of a "loyal" Chicago detective, Adam Piukerton by name, who straightway rushes into print to prove that he is the man to whom the nation.

employ of the President of the Philadelphin, Wilmington, and Baltimore railroad company to whom it had been whispered that these same terrible secession conspirators intended to do his road a damage, when he received information of that other appalling conspiracy, which, as he was a "loyal" man, he proceeded, after some deliberation, to communicate to the Honorable Norman B. Judd, the President's confidential friend, and who was then with him at Philadelphia. Mr. Pinkerton does not rest his claim to immortality as against Superintendent Kennedy on his own bare assertion, but backs it up by a lengthy statement from Mr. Judd himself. Now this same Honorable Norman B. Judd had had more to do with making Mr. Lincoln President than any other man living. He it was who reported the celebrated Illinois discussions between Douglas and Lincoln, and in those discussions between Douglas and Lincoln, and in those discussions, put into the latter's mouth specches that gave him reputation and the Chicago nomination, and which he never equaled either before or since. Judd, we may therefore reasonably conclude, was a jewel of a reporter in a partisan point of view; but as the same individual is rarely great in more than one thing, we ought not to be surprised on learning that Judd proved himself as the same individual is rarely great in more than one thing, we ought not to be surprised on learning that Judd proved himself as the same individual is rarely great in more than one thing, we ought not to be surprised on learning that Judd proved himself as the same individual is rarely great in more than one thing, we ought not to be surprised on learning that Judd proved himself as the province of the interface of their actions, hide they when the present Congress continue in a struggle for political sequences of their action, the present Congress continue in a soffice of races? As a matter of course he couldn't keep his fright long to himself. He told his chief the direful tale in Report of St. Paul's Church Missionary Sohimself. He told his chief the direction and counseled the course that was subsequently pursued. From Mr. Judd's account, while he and his master were dreadfully scared, they did not forget that they were likely to be laughed a', and so the congregation.

And this, venerable brethren, is why all the prelates of the Catholia world, closely united to us by the bonds of faith and of charity, and unanimous to defend the Holy See, and actuated by one songle thought, by one sentiment, do not cease, some by word of mouth, others by their pen, to defend the cause of Catholiciam, ourselves and the Holy See. Even laymen in the great and unbile assemblies in Europe raise their voices for the protection of the Catholic church and of this Holy See, and in the Interests of our temporal power and of the sovereignty of this See.

This cause of our temporal power in the Senate at Paris capecially, and in the Corps Legislatif, has been splendidly and magnificently defended aimost to a unanimity of votes amidst the applause and the Joy of all weil-thinking men.

In reply to a committee of delegates who asked Gen. Hancock what course he would take in case the State courts interfered with the collection of the tax, the General has stated that to anticipate any such illegal setton would be improper, and that it will be time enough to consider it when the emergency arises. It is a significant fact that this reply was addressed only to the two white delegates of the committee, entirely ignoring the third, a mulatto.
